Currently, the Department offers three courses namely - Ph.D., M.A., and B.A. (Hons.) in which the orientation is directed towards not only the Literature of the British Isles and of America but also New Literatures, including Indian Writing in English. The resources for research in English are also rich in various branches of English Literature. The Department is also known presently for its Head of the Department, Prof. Vikas Sharma, who is a well-known novelist. The diverse research activities in the Department covering areas like British Literature, American Literature, Canadian Literature, Commonwealth Literature, and Indian Writing in English ensure regular contributions from visiting speakers, which creates an academic environment.

ASSOCIATION FOR ENGLISH STUDIES OF INDIA

In the early 1930s, Indian scholars of English Literature began to feel the need of a platform where scholars of English Literature of the country could assemble to discuss and deliberate various issues related to the English teaching and research in India. As a result, the first formal association was formed at Allahabad University in the year 1937 and with the passage of time the Association took its shape as The Indian Association for English Studies (IAES). Later on, it was registered in 2007 as The Association for English Studies of India (AESI). Keeping in view the aims and objectives of AESI, its governing body plans and executes its academic activities.

Organizing an Annual Conference once in a year in any part of India is one of the major activities of the Association. So far sixty-five such conferences have already been organised successfully in different parts of India. The official website of the AESI is www.aesi-india.org which can be accessed to get the information about various types of memberships offered as well as other academic activities like the publication of The Indian Journal of English Studies, conferences etc.

Concept Note - Voices Across Borders: Socio-Cultural Globalism in Literatures in English from Indian Historical Perspectives

The Conference aims to delve into the diverse and rich literary traditions of English Literature from Indian historical perspectives. It seeks to explore the voices that have emerged across borders, transcending geographical, cultural, and temporal boundaries. By focusing on socio-cultural globalism, the Conference will critically analyze the historical, social, and political contexts in which these Literatures were produced, and their implications for contemporary society. Indian Literature in English has witnessed a remarkable evolution, capturing the diverse voices, narratives, and experiences of a nation steeped in a rich historical and cultural heritage. These literary works transcend geographical and temporal boundaries, engaging with global themes and perspectives while reflecting the socio-cultural globalism inherent in India's historical contexts. The Conference dives into the significance of Indian Literature in English, examining its portrayal of identity, diaspora, cultural hybridity, and the socio-political concerns that shape its narratives. By exploring these themes, the Conference will uncover the profound impact of Indian Literature in English in fostering cross-cultural understanding and redefining literary discourse on a global scale. Indian Literature in English emerged during the colonial era, reflecting the impact of British colonization on Indian society. It bears witness to the struggles, aspirations, and resistance of colonized people. Writers like Raja Rao, Mulk Raj Anand, and R.K. Narayan explored the complex dynamics of identity, interrogating the notion of self in the face of colonial dominance. Their works, such as Rao's Kanthapura and Anand's Untouchable, provide insights into the cultural, social, and political transformations of the time.

Indian Literature in English thrives on the exploration of cultural hybridity and the negotiation of identities. Writers like Salman Rushdie, Amitav Ghosh, and Jhumpa Lahiri depict the diasporic experiences of Indians living abroad. Their narratives depict the struggles of characters caught between multiple worlds, negotiating their Indian heritage with the foreign cultures they encounter. These authors challenge stereotypes, question fixed notions of identity, and celebrate the complexities of cultural diversity.

Indian Literature in English serves as a powerful medium for addressing socio-political concerns within Indian society. It highlights issues such as caste discrimination, gender inequality, communal tensions, and socio-economic disparities. Writers like Arundhati Roy, Aravind Adiga and Meena Kandasamy bring these concerns to the forefront. Their works such as Roy's The God of Small Things, Adiga's The White Tiger and Vikas Sharma's IAS Today offer critical insights into the complexities of Indian society. Postcolonial perspectives dominate Indian Literature in English, challenging colonial narratives and reclaiming indigenous histories. Writers like Vikram Chandra, Amit Chaudhuri, and Kamila Shamsie explore the nuances of power dynamics, both during the colonial period and in its aftermath.

Indian Literature in English engages with global themes and perspectives, reflecting the interconnectedness of our world. It delves into issues of migration, diaspora, globalization, multiculturalism, environmentalism, and the impact of technology on society. Writers like Amitav Ghosh, Kiran Desai, and Chitra Banerjee Divakaruni explore these themes, transcending national boundaries and contributing to a broader understanding of global experiences. Ghosh's The Hungry Tide and Desai's The Inheritance of Loss exemplify the global outlook of Indian Literature in English.

Indian Literature in English holds a significant place within the global literary landscape. Through its exploration of historical perspectives, cultural hybridity, socio-political concerns, postcolonial narratives, and global themes, it presents a diverse tapestry of voices across borders. By showcasing the complex realities of Indian society and engaging with universal themes, this literature fosters cross-cultural understanding, challenges stereotypes, and redefines literary discourse on a global scale.
